Abstract of the Disclosure

A method measures an intensity of motion activity in a compressed video. The intensity of the motion activity is used to partition the video into segments of equal cumulative motion activity. Key-frames are then selected from each segments. The selected key-frames are concatenated in temporal order to form a summary of the video.